Idahoans for Openness in Government

What is IDOG?

Idahoans for Openness in Government, or IDOG, is a broad-based, nonprofit coalition for open government. Like similar coalitions in more than 40 other states, IDOG's aim is to promote open government and freedom of information. IDOG's board includes people from government, the media, civic organizations and more.

IDOG's initial project was to put on open-government seminars in communities across the state of Idaho, in partnership with the Idaho Attorney General, the Idaho Press Club, the Idaho Association of Counties and the Association of Idaho Cities. We reached all parts of the state with these workshops, conducting more than 50 sessions with longtime Idaho Attorney General Lawrence Wasden focusing on Idaho's public records and open meetings laws. IDOG received funding for this project from the National Freedom of Information Coalition through grants from the John S. and James L. Knight Foundation. We also received a grant from the Best of the West Foundation, a group dedicated to openness and freedom of information and funded by an annual journalism contest; another from the Idaho Media Initiative; and most recently, another from the UISAPA journalism contest.

Our latest project is a series of government transparency workshops in partnership with Idaho Secretary of State Phil McGrane, Idaho State Controller Brandon Woolf, and Idaho Public Television, with the endorsement and recommendation of the Association of Idaho Cities, the Idaho Association of Counties, Attorneys for Civic Education and the Idaho Press Club.

IDOG's mission is to foster open government, supervised by an informed and engaged citizenry. We believe that we all benefit when the public, the media and government officials are fully aware of the public's rights to access government information and observe the conduct of the public's business.

On the web

Our website, www.openidaho.org, features information about IDOG and its activities along with news stories on open records and open meetings developments around the state.
